The bottom diagram shows a blue circle with a red center point. A horizontal line with a red dot at its right end is positioned to the left of the circle. The red dot is aligned with the center of the circle. This illustrates the concept of a line being tangent to a circle at a point, where the point of tangency is the center of the circle.
